Obafemi Awolowo and the Making of Remo examines the evolution of the Yoruba community, Remo, and the central role played by the nationalist politician and Yoruba leader Obafemi Awolowo (1909–87). Based on a subtle analysis of local-level politics, the book argues that participatory structures play an important part both in Yoruba politics and in the African postcolonial state. The work constitutes an important contribution to the scholarly debate on one of Nigeria’s most important politicians.

Insa Nolte is Lecturer in African Culture at the Centre of West African Studies, University of Birmingham.
